the others get ahead and then gait to catch up. What fun!

We rode out for about an hour and a half and then took a different route back. At one point, AD and William challenged each other to a race, an open field being immediately accessible. The Arab and the Thoroughbred started off nose to nose but soon were nose to tail, and then the thoroughbred pulled ahead at a breathless speed, and soon there was no contest at all – just a friendly sprint between an athlete and a couch potato. (Sorry Trilogy). After the ride it was time to eat. AD's kitchen counter was laden with a delicious assortment of foods. We heaped our plates high and headed for one of the two large porches to sit and enjoy conversation with our friends. The afternoon ended all too soon, but not before some of us drove over to check out Empty Acres, the new equestrian horse park. What a nice place that it, with many barns and outdoor arenas, two covered arenas, a tack store, and a veterinarian hospital. It looks like a great place to hold a gymkhana or horse show. We would like to
